

BOTH PHONES 93.
PHONE
W.F. Norman & Sons
FOR CAB
—OR—
FOR TEAMS.
—
PROMPT SERVICE.
—
BOTH PHONES 93.

THE MORNING HERALD

By E. W. HARRIS & SON.
Entered at the postoffice at Greenville, Tex., as second-class mail matter

SUNDAY, JANUARY 30, 1910.

CHOICE SELECTIONS

Worth Remembering.
Reach up as far as you can, and God will reach down all the rest of the way.—John H. Vincent.

Every genuine love is both an evidence of the divine love and a preparation for it.—Henry Churchill King.

Character is higher than intellect. A great soul will be strong to live, as well as strong to think.—R. W. Emerson.

The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.—St. Peter.

Faith of a Scientist.

"As we surmount peak after peak, we see in front of us regions full of interest and beauty, but we do not see our goal, we do not see the horizon," said Sir J. J. Thompson, retiring president, in an address delivered before the British Scientific Association. "In the distance tower still higher peaks, which will yield to those who ascend them still wider prospects, and deepen the feeling, whose truth is emphasized by every advance in science, 'Great are the works of the Lord.'

Foregoing Present Advantage.

"There is always sufficient inducement to obey God, because the demands made upon us are reasonable," writes Dr. Marcus Dods. "No man was ever required to do anything which it was not for his advantage to do. Sin is a mistake. But so weak are we, so liable to be moved by the things present to us and by the desire for immediate gratification that it never ceases to be wonderful and admirable when a sense of duty enables a man to forego present advantage and to believe that present loss is the needful preliminary of eternal gain."

Debasing the Practical.

"There is no more insidious peril in modern religious life than the debasement of our conception of the practical," says Dr. J. H. Jowett. "If we divorce the practical from the sublime, the practical will become the superficial, and will degenerate into a very lean and foreseen thing. People who live and move beneath great domes acquire a certain calm and stately dignity. It is in companionship with the sublime that awkwardness and coarseness are destroyed. Reverence is the very key to fruitful practical living. A reverent homage before the sublimities of yesterday is the condition of a fine perception of the hidden triumphs of the morrow. To feel the days before me I must reverse the purpose which throb behind me. I must bow in reverence if I would anticipate in hope."

Relation of Truth to Conduct.

"In all this renewal and expansion of what I have proudly called practical Christianity there is, if I mistake not, a danger, or at least a serious possibility, of loss," writes Dr. Henry Van Dyke. "The life of man is not only practical, it is also intellectual. His relations to his fellow-men are important, but his relation to truth is no less important. He can not help acting, neither can he help thinking. When his thinking is divorced from his acting, when he has one standard for truth itself and a different standard for conduct, he is like a house divided against itself. If the Christianity of today, by dwelling exclusively or too much on the ethical side of the Gospel as a beautiful and benevolent rule of conduct, illustrated by a perfect example, tends to ignore the intellectual necessities of man and fails to realize that it has a message to deliver in the realm of truth as well as in that of righteousness, it will not meet the deepest needs of the present age. Indeed, it wants and deserves to be more fully realized."

I. R. N. Leading

small one he is also inviting disappointment and embarrassment. The working of this law is discernible in the fact that the great inventions of the day are most frequently the result of the inventor's experiences in the line of his ordinary task. What he has learned there has taught him the better way of his invention. But the highest application of this truth is that the earthly life, moving amid the scenes so familiar as to become dull, and busy with everyday duties, is the preparation for the eternal life that the faithful live with God. The calls of God to higher service and to higher privilege come always as they lead a child up to the father's throne if his heart and mind are open to it," writes Abbie E. Danforth. "Fill the heart with goodness, and there is no place for baseness. Fill the soul with heaven, and there is no hell. And this delightful time will come when 'God is all and in all.'"

True Standard For Living.

We reach salvation only by realizing that our life does not rest in the body, but in the spirit of God which lives within us; that therefore all the efforts hitherto directed to the improvement of our bodily life must be directed to one single and essential work; that each must extend his love not only to those who love him, but, as Christ says, to all men, especially to those who are alienated from us, or hate us. Today our life is so far removed from that ideal that it seems impossible to transfer our interest from worldly things to the one essential and unaccustomed work of love. That, however, is a delusion. To love all, even those who hate us, is really not so remote from us as to hate all and fight with all. A change in our conception of life is not impossible; the real impossibility is to continue the fight of all against all in which we are now engaged. Only such a change can deliver men from the sufferings they get from getting into your system.

The latest product of science is VELVO Laxative Liver Syrup, purify vegetable, reliable and of a pleasant, aromatic taste. VELVO acts on the liver, as well as on stomach and bowels, and is of the greatest possible efficacy in constipation, indigestion, sick headache, feverishness, colic, flatulence, etc., Try.

IDEALS ARE DOMINANT.

"It is by ideals that the rational man is led to self-surrender," writes Dr. James Iversen. "It is by an appeal to his rational nature that the process of self-realization can be guided to its destined end. Each aspect of our complex nature makes its own contribution to the ideal. Nor can science make any progress without an appeal to the ideal. From the experience that the self has of the energy it exerts in its own action, science leaps forth to the conception of an infinite and eternal energy from which all things proceed. From the intelligent action of the self and the room for it in action which experiences in the world, science obtains the conception of an intelligence which is equal to the ordering of the world. Reason is postulated as the cause of the rationality in the world. From the appreciation of the beauty and harmony which man finds in the world, the aesthetic ideal of an infinite source of beauty is constructed. The conscience of man thrives after righteousness can not rest until it reaches an ideal being of perfect righteousness in which there is no becoming and the heart of man demands an ideal of perfect goodness and love. As long as any demand of intelligence, conscience, heart or reason is unrecognized, there can be no peace for man. Only when all the claims of the many-sided nature of man are recognized in the conception of an otherwise holy, loving, almighty God, can man realize himself."

Work 24 Hours a Day.

The busiest little things ever made are Dr. King's New Life Pills. Every pill is a sugar-coated globule of health, energy, brain-fog into strength, that changes weakness into strength. Headache, Chills, Dyspepsia, Malaria, etc. at all drugists.

Rev. J. W. Williams Testifies

Rev. J. W. Williams, Huntington, W. Va., writes as follows: "This is to certify that I take Dr. King's Kidney Remedy for nervous complaints and kidney trouble and am free to say that Foley's Kidney Remedy will do all that you claim for it." Said by Gee's Drug Store.

A STEADY DRAIN.

Sick Kidneys Weaken the Whole Body—Make You Ill, Languid and Depressed.

Sick kidneys weaken the body through the continual drainage of life giving albumen from the blood into the urine, and the substitution of poisonous uric acid that goes broadcast through the system, sowing the seeds of disease. Loss of albumen causes weakness, languor, depression. Uric poisoning causes rheumatic pain, nervousness, nausea, cricks in the back, gravel and kidney stones. The proper treatment is a kidney treatment, and the best remedy is Dr. King's Pill. Great Greenville cures prove it.

Mrs. L. Hayman, 412 W. Lee St., Greenville, Tex., says: "For nearly two years I was subject to attacks of kidney complaint. There was a dull, throbbing ache across the small of my back which kept me in misery and the kidney secretions were too frequent in passage. Headaches were common and until I purchased Dr. King's Pill at Ford and Beaman's drug store, I could not sleep at night. Now, however, I am well again and have no trouble. I am grateful to Dr. King's Pill."

FINE EGGS FOR SALE—Barred Plymouth Rock and Columbian Wyandotte. While I have the cheapest, they are the best. Plymouth Rock eggs, $1.50 for 15. Columbian eggs, $2.50 for 15. Prices

Prices, 25¢ a dozen.

Measure for size of a hen's egg. Appropriate to Beckman Hotel, still open at 12:30 p.m. Dr. Price.

Broken lenses and glasses.

Optical Goods.

Both phones 93.

Entered at the post office at Greenville, Tex., as second-class mail matter

Sunday, Jan. 30, 1910.

CHOICE SELECTIONS

Worth Remembering.

Reach up as far as you can, and God will reach down all the rest of the way.—John H. Vincent.

Every genuine love is both an evidence of the divine love and a preparation for it.—Henry Churchill King.

Character is higher than intellect. A great soul will be strong to live, as well as strong to think.—R. W. Emerson.

The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.—St. Peter.

Faith of a Scientist.

"As we surmount peak after peak, we see in front of us regions full of interest and beauty, but we do not see our goal, we do not see the horizon," said Sir J. J. Thompson, retiring president, in an address delivered before the British Scientific Association. "In the distance tower still higher peaks, which will yield to those who ascend them still wider prospects, and deepen the feeling, whose truth is emphasized by every advance in science, 'Great are the works of the Lord.'

Foregoing Present Advantage.

"There is always sufficient inducement to obey God, because the demands made upon us are reasonable," writes Dr. Marcus Dods. "No man was ever required to do anything which it was not for his advantage to do. Sin is a mistake. But so weak are we, so liable to be moved by the things present to us and by the desire for immediate gratification that it never ceases to be wonderful and admirable when a sense of duty enables a man to forego present advantage and to believe that present loss is the needful preliminary of eternal gain."

Debasing the Practical.

"There is no more insidious peril in modern religious life than the debasement of our conception of the practical," says Dr. J. H. Jowett. "If we divorce the practical from the sublime, the practical will become the superficial, and will degenerate into a very lean and foreseen thing. People who live and move beneath great domes acquire a certain calm and stately dignity. It is in companionship with the sublime that awkwardness and coarseness are destroyed. Reverence is the very key to fruitful practical living. A reverent homage before the sublimities of yesterday is the condition of a fine perception of the hidden triumphs of the morrow. To feel the days before me I must reverse the purpose which throb behind me. I must bow in reverence if I would anticipate in hope."

Relation of Truth to Conduct.

"In all this renewal and expansion of what I have proudly called practical Christianity there is, if I mistake not, a danger, or at least a serious possibility, of loss," writes Dr. Henry Van Dyke. "The life of man is not only practical, it is also intellectual. His relations to his fellow-men are important, but his relation to truth is no less important. He can not help acting, neither can he help thinking. When his thinking is divorced from his acting, when he has one standard for truth itself and a different standard for conduct, he is like a house divided against itself. If the Christianity of today, by dwelling exclusively or too much on the ethical side of the Gospel as a beautiful and benevolent rule of conduct, illustrated by a perfect example, tends to ignore the intellectual necessities of man and fails to realize that it has a message to deliver in the realm of truth as well as in that of righteousness, it will not meet the deepest needs of the present age. Indeed, it wants and deserves to be more fully realized."

I. R. N. Leading

Both phones 93.

Entered at the post office at Greenville, Tex., as second-class mail matter

Sunday, Jan. 30, 1910.

CHOICE SELECTIONS

Worth Remembering.

Reach up as far as you can, and God will reach down all the rest of the way.—John H. Vincent.

Every genuine love is both an evidence of the divine love and a preparation for it.—Henry Churchill King.

Character is higher than intellect. A great soul will be strong to live, as well as strong to think.—R. W. Emerson.

The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.—St. Peter.

Faith of a Scientist.

"As we surmount peak after peak, we see in front of us regions full of interest and beauty, but we do not see our goal, we do not see the horizon," said Sir J. J. Thompson, retiring president, in an address delivered before the British Scientific Association. "In the distance tower still higher peaks, which will yield to those who ascend them still wider prospects, and deepen the feeling, whose truth is emphasized by every advance in science, 'Great are the works of the Lord.'

Foregoing Present Advantage.

"There is always sufficient inducement to obey God, because the demands made upon us are reasonable," writes Dr. Marcus Dods. "No man was ever required to do anything which it was not for his advantage to do. Sin is a mistake. But so weak are we, so liable to be moved by the things present to us and by the desire for immediate gratification that it never ceases to be wonderful and admirable when a sense of duty enables a man to forego present advantage and to believe that present loss is the needful preliminary of eternal gain."

Debasing the Practical.

"There is no more insidious peril in modern religious life than the debasement of our conception of the practical," says Dr. J. H. Jowett. "If we divorce the practical from the sublime, the practical will become the superficial, and will degenerate into a very lean and foreseen thing. People who live and move beneath great domes acquire a certain calm and stately dignity. It is in companionship with the sublime that awkwardness and coarseness are destroyed. Reverence is the very key to fruitful practical living. A reverent homage before the sublimities of yesterday is the condition of a fine perception of the hidden triumphs of the morrow. To feel the days before me I must reverse the purpose which throb behind me. I must bow in reverence if I would anticipate in hope."

Relation of Truth to Conduct.

"In all this renewal and expansion of what I have proudly called practical Christianity there is, if I mistake not, a danger, or at least a serious possibility, of loss," writes Dr. Henry Van Dyke. "The life of man is not only practical, it is also intellectual. His relations to his fellow-men are important, but his relation to truth is no less important. He can not help acting, neither can he help thinking. When his thinking is divorced from his acting, when he has one standard for truth itself and a different standard for conduct, he is like a house divided against itself. If the Christianity of today, by dwelling exclusively or too much on the ethical side of the Gospel as a beautiful and benevolent rule of conduct, illustrated by a perfect example, tends to ignore the intellectual necessities of man and fails to realize that it has a message to deliver in the realm of truth as well as in that of righteousness, it will not meet the deepest needs of the present age. Indeed, it wants and deserves to be more fully realized."

I. R. N. Leading

Both phones 93.

Entered at the post office at Greenville, Tex., as second-class mail matter

Sunday, Jan. 30, 1910.

CHOICE SELECTIONS

Worth Remembering.

Reach up as far as you can, and God will reach down all the rest of the way.—John H. Vincent.

Every genuine love is both an evidence of the divine love and a preparation for it.—Henry Churchill King.

Character is higher than intellect. A great soul will be strong to live, as well as strong to think.—R. W. Emerson.

The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.—St. Peter.

Faith of a Scientist.

"As we surmount peak after peak, we see in front of us regions full of interest and beauty, but we do not see our goal, we do not see the horizon," said Sir J. J. Thompson, retiring president, in an address delivered before the British Scientific Association. "In the distance tower still higher peaks, which will yield to those who ascend them still wider prospects, and deepen the feeling, whose truth is emphasized by every advance in science, 'Great are the works of the Lord.'

Foregoing Present Advantage.

"There is always sufficient inducement to obey God, because the demands made upon us are reasonable," writes Dr. Marcus Dods. "No man was ever required to do anything which it was not for his advantage to do. Sin is a mistake. But so weak are we, so liable to be moved by the things present to us and by the desire for immediate gratification that it never ceases to be wonderful and admirable when a sense of duty enables a man to forego present advantage and to believe that present loss is the needful preliminary of eternal gain."

Debasing the Practical.

"There is no more insidious peril in modern religious life than the debasement of our conception of the practical," says Dr. J. H. Jowett. "If we divorce the practical from the sublime, the practical will become the superficial, and will degenerate into a very lean and foreseen thing. People who live and move beneath great domes acquire a certain calm and stately dignity. It is in companionship with the sublime that awkwardness and coarseness are destroyed. Reverence is the very key to fruitful practical living. A reverent homage before the sublimities of yesterday is the condition of a fine perception of the hidden triumphs of the morrow. To feel the days before me I must reverse the purpose which throb behind me. I must bow in reverence if I would anticipate in hope."

Relation of Truth to Conduct.

"In all this renewal and expansion of what I have proudly called practical Christianity there is, if I mistake not, a danger, or at least a serious possibility, of loss," writes Dr. Henry Van Dyke. "The life of man is not only practical, it is also intellectual. His relations to his fellow-men are important, but his relation to truth is no less important. He can not help acting, neither can he help thinking. When his thinking is divorced from his acting, when he has one standard for truth itself and a different standard for conduct, he is like a house divided against itself. If the Christianity of today, by dwelling exclusively or too much on the ethical side of the Gospel as a beautiful and benevolent rule of conduct, illustrated by a perfect example, tends to ignore the intellectual necessities of man and fails to realize that it has a message to deliver in the realm of truth as well as in that of righteousness, it will not meet the deepest needs of the present age. Indeed, it wants and deserves to be more fully realized."

I. R. N. Leading

Both phones 93.

Entered at the post office at Greenville, Tex., as second-class mail matter

Sunday, Jan. 30, 1910.

CHOICE SELECTIONS

Worth Remembering.